Chapter 1 by JustCafeManager

Every day, we continue our lives as how it is.

Through ups and downs no matter what. It is difficult as we go on with everything. But do you notice?

When we walk by streets, there would millions of people. People with different looks, clothes and ages.

We'd usually bump into them, maybe muttering apologies to them or not.

It's only meaningful if we know them, right?

Or maybe it would just mean a small intersection between millions or two lives.

Hey, you wouldn't actually would know the person who you'd bumped into might be the one for you!

Chapter 2 by Jess Ash

Everybody's got one, and you know that. The perfect person for you is out there. The one with the perfect hair color, sparkling eyes begging to be outlined with perfectly thin and dark swipes of eyeliner, lips waiting to be colored. You're watching for that person. Your soulmate.

The perfect victim.

You're sitting outside in front of a cafe, people watching while you sip a cup of coffee. Last week's kill had gone off without a hitch. You always did like the dark-haired ones with bright blue eyes. They'd looked absolutely gorgeous all dressed up and posed for you, and dinner had been absolutely lovely with them. It had been fantastic, yes, but you knew they weren't the one.

Your eyes catch on a girl in a bright sundress, floppy straw hat on her head, phone in one hand and muffin in the other. Blonde hair flows in shining waves from under the hat's brim. She's not your typical target, not by any means, and you know for certain that she's not the one either.

Oh, but she is absolutely beautiful.

She'll do for tonight, you decide. You slap a handful of bills on the table to cover your coffee and a tip for the waitress.
